It started off with a breeze a bit, As the wind howled deeper into it; It blew and blew a gale at least;

Of men of told who are now all deceased.

An eerie presence like a spirit on heat,

Screeching and screaming and chilling my feet;

The branches move and some do break;

A tree will fall and make no mistake.

The leaves are swept from street to street,

As a town will turn and stop the people who meet;

The paper fly up and around and about,

As frustration torments in a wind of doubt.

The clouds pass by without question and go,

And the sun is darkened but there's light to know;

Cars whistling but with a bit of a sway,

But the winds still comforting in its own precious way.

A plane up there no need to care,

It's high above all that windy air;

The motor boats speed on the distant bay,

The wind is still blowing and will blow all day.

The fire is warming and crackling a spark,

As the night moves in and it's getting dark;

The smoke stream of f in the distance there,

As the windy day dies down into cold night air.
Signed,
Done its own thing	