

When a man takes a wife and they make their vows,
And as the grace of God and the minister allows;
To pronounce the sentence of marriage and continue on,
And think not of the troubled times and suffering beyond.

The beauty of imagination and anticipation fulfils and reveals,
Until the truth of uncertainty hides all that it conceals;
Or if you understand each line of the spoken word on time,
You will meander wander down the course of life in rhyme.

That the love and romance of poetry that you may find,
In the life of partnership and marriage of perfect kind;
And in the art of life where many will marry and take a wife,
The minister is to pronounce the sentence that knows not what the strife.

And if you understand that the two shall be as one,
As all will come at once and so will all shall be but won;
Until you make and take and consider all the cost,
The price is right if you can hope and not be lost,

So when it's right to pronounce the sentence of marriage,
The minister will pronounce the pair both man and wife;
In the course of time since the world of horse and carriage,
The two shall be as one and be for the rest of their life.

And so in the course their taking when man shall be with the wife,
And others who have feared with cause or without strife;
Will find the time of danger now love beyond compare,
As the sentence is pronounced of marriage through life in prayer.

Signed,
