

The ship was a mainstay in the life and voyage of God,

Who sailed around the world in the times and days of odd;

And now the years have passed and journeyed down the ages,

Through the seasons of wind and rain and along the lines on pages.

In the ways and means of travelling the ship was set on water,

Out sailing on the oceans and across seas to countries it ought to;

And as the passage of the vessel would rock and sway on currents,

Over waves and swells of trouble and turmoil steering torrents.

And from shore to shore across the miles and years of purpose,

With whales breaching in the pods and the dolphins and the porpoises;

As the beauty of the tide and changing seasons yearning,

The heart of adventure and excitement constantly was turning.

And the magic of the dolphins as they ride the wave of the bow,

With God at the helm and wheel steering from the ships stern slow;

Continues on the journey of passage as the wind in the sails blow,

Like it was drifting in the channels of love that grows and flow.

The ship can be our friends and leader or steward of the work,

As the reader finds the true love of language in the word;

And the direction of the travelling is around and around the globe,

As the faith in God almighty is God's faith in us like Job.

And I wonder where I'll get to when I get to where I'm going,

And the end of the journey and voyage will be the place that I am knowing;

For the land that is visible on the horizon is a long time coming,

And returning to the start is a long way back from arriving.
